(part 2) (Needs Practice) The Fight begins! “This is war! This is war! This is war!” Ivan cried, telling his friends to follow him to the next building when the fighting started for Rillget-lai, Tennadow. “Hmm,” Cadevan mused to himself. “An interesting place would be more fitting for a vampire than a flerbear.” Ivan and Valen bustled down the halls to the columbarium and they ran into Sirry on the way in. She looked a little sick to them but she wasn’t too out of it. She had water though, but she wasn’t thinking about drinking or putting anything down at all. She only wanted to fall into Ivan’s arms and cry. They sprinted past her and Ivan threw open the metal doors and pushed. His friends crowded in to get a better view. It was a busy night and vampires had crowded in the place by the windows and were all vying for a look into the outside. On the outside, flerbalion had arrived and were walking through the door and into the room. Cadevan was paying attention to his surroundings. “Wait!” Sirry screamed when she saw the flerbalion coming. “Don’t—” “WOW!” Ivan screamed when he saw the mutant fishcrows attacking them. The fishcrows had gills sticking out of their arms and legs. They were deep red and very fuzzy. Their eyes were like a wolf’s. They all attacked the flerbalion. The vampires were on the back of the flerbalion and they raced out of the columbarium. Cadevan could see he was in trouble. Ivan grabbed his sword and ran towards Valen and Sirry to help but the flerbalion glanced around and saw him. It turned to face Ivan and Ivan made the next move. He lunged with his shortsword and the creature stumbled backwards. “FOOL!” the creature gasped. “FOOLISH FUCKING BOY!” But the creature was no longer a man. Ivan had wounded him severely. And he was enraged. Ivan saw his friends looking at him and he smiled as his rage burned in his veins. He
